It literally looks nothing like Photoshop; it's a beast of a program, and takes a lot of time to learn. But it's well worth the effort. For those who simply aren't interested in learning, you'll probably be able to find a free clone app that can do much of what you need. At a high level, Pixelmator is simple. Text is formatted from "Type less, See more." Text is often interpreted as your final design. So you don't have to worry about WYSIWYG editing, you simply just edit the type. What you use your mouse for is to select parts of the text to make adjustments. Of course, you can move the text around, rotate it, etc. But here's what I like best about Pixelmator: You can adjust the size of the text, select all of it, then "snap to pixel" when making the above font edits. Lifepixel, which is free, could be compared to Snapchat or Instagram (though it's more like Instagram than Snapchat). You can take a photo, shape it, color it, and add stickers. It's worth taking a look at for fun.
